Here's an irony

Technology created to solve a market problem

Kills a startup

In a world where almost every start-up strives to deliver their product or service through technology, the cost of technology and the murky world of technology choices overwhelms most entrepreneurs and blunts most game-changing ideas.

What is the process after you apply?

01

We discuss your business idea with you in detail

- We are evaluating viability
- We are trying to understand the problem you seek to solve
- We are looking to see if you have done your research and know everything there is to know

- We do not care much about projections
- We do not care about the size of the market
- We are not looking for big dreams. We are looking for clarity in thought

02

We want to meet with your founding team

- Ultimately, we are investing in the founding team not the idea itself. We know you will inevitably evolve.
- We want to understand what each member of the founding team brings to the table
- We want to understand the team dynamics

- We do not like team members who are brought in just because they are friends or acquaintances. If you can't value your equity at this stage of growth, you will not unlock its true worth when it is time.
- Founding team members who don't know each other well are not likely to succeed in the long run.

What is the process after you apply?

03

We want to understand what value to assign to your business

- We will initially be investing our technology and time without any cost. We will be seeking equity in return.
- To make it worth our while, we must know that you value your business both honestly and correctly.

- We are open to structuring but not at this stage. At this stage, we want to understand exactly why you value your business the way you value it.
- Use projections if you need to make your point but do not make up numbers.

04

Deal structuring

- If we are satisfied, we will make you an offer. The offer will be technology and business support for equity.
- We may make an offer to invest cash directly in the business if the business is already operational.
- We like structuring but remember transparency is everything.

- We do not make cash investments before we see a minimum viable product.
- We do not make cash investments where we do not understand the purpose of raising money.
- We do not participate in funding rounds with other investors under this program. Acies Ventures may do so separately.
